STEPPING STONES is the historic home of Alcoholics Anonymous co-founder Bill Wilson (Bill W.) and his wife, Lois Wilson (Lois W.), co-founder of Al-Anon/Alateen, located in Westchester County, New York. The site includes the Wilsons' home—a 1920 Dutch Colonial Revival structure—along with Bill W.'s writing studio, known as "Wit's End." Visitors can also see approximately 15,000 objects left by the Wilsons, including furniture and memorabilia; a water pump house; the original one-car garage; and a two-car garage that now serves as a Welcome Center. The Welcome Center features an orientation display highlighting select items from the more than 100,000 pieces in the Stepping Stones Archives. The grounds include a flower garden, a community vegetable garden, and additional outdoor features. Lois Wilson left the property to the Stepping Stones Foundation, the nonprofit, tax-exempt organization she founded in 1979. Since her death in 1988, the Foundation—supported by friends of Stepping Stones—has maintained and preserved the site and offers guided tours by reservation. We look forward to sharing the afternoon with you.
